

OFFER OF EMPLOYMENT

FROM THE OFFICE OF RAJ MODI, DEPT. OF OPTIMISTIC PAPERWORK

Dear Wolters Kluwer,

After a rigorous interview process (today), careful review of your qualifications (market leader in trust-critical software, excellent taste in job descriptions), and consultation with my advisory board (one AI assistant; it concurred), I am delighted to extend to you the position of:

MY EMPLOYER

FULL-TIME · EFFECTIVE IMMEDIATELY · FCC DATA SCIENCE DIVISION

Your responsibilities will include:

- Providing one (1) desk, within reasonable distance of the data
- Supplying problems significantly harder than the ones I could invent alone
- Conducting code reviews of a thoroughness I have so far only simulated
- Tolerating an intern who brings printed documents to everything

In exchange, you will receive:

- One pre-trained intern (warm-boot time: 0.36 seconds, like the model)
- A working FCC analytics platform's worth of demonstrated judgment
- 82 tests' worth of paranoia, applied to your benefit
- The phrase "every number shows its work," installed in your building

Compensation: you already know what interns cost. I am asking for the internship, mentorship, and the hard problems. The leverage in this deal is entirely, embarrassingly, yours.

This offer expires: never. But the candidate's availability might.

To accept, simply say the words every candidate dreams of: "When can you start?"

Sincerely, and only half-joking,

Raj Modi

CHIEF EXECUTIVE OF EXACTLY ONE CANDIDACY

HR note: this document is a bit. The candidacy is not.
All actual terms yours to define. The enthusiasm is binding.
